Sugar Manufacture.

(From the Fiji Times, December 27, 1876.) Can it be that we are on the eve of a complete revolution in the system of sugar manufacture! Mr. Rastes, formerly a manufacturing chemist of repute in England, and now resident at Beenleigh, has brought before our notice a new process of making sugar, which is apparently a most important discov ery. It is well known that great waste opener is sugar-making by the ordinary process, not only in precipitating insullable saccharide of lime, but also in the amount of juice generally lost in skimmings. Besides this, it cannot be controverted that lime deteriories from the quality of the sugar, and is an active agent in the fermation of melasses. By Mr. Easter' method, the following advantages are alleged "Latest cable news gives a still more threatlabor can penally be enforced will secure the

The sugar granulates freely, and is of fine colour." Mr. Eastes goes on to say further that many may not be-lieve him, but "nevertheless it is a fact which I can demonstrate. Such astounding results have never been attained before—and the process cannot be im-proved upon—it leares nothing to be desired. This is a truth which I can prove. No lime, no electriciis a truth which I can prove. No lime, no electricity, and no filtering enter into my precess. All the sugar is crystalized, and no molasses is produced."

A great advantage gained by the new process is, that it may be entrausted to workmen. It is quite possible that a little molasses might be produced when working up had came, as Mr. Eastes has hitherto only treated juice at 18° density. But by no process hitherto employed can the whole of the sugar be crystalized, even from the best cames, and this is what the inventor claims specially for his method—all the sugar is obtained. The mechanical appliances need by Mr. Eastes are of imperfect structure, and it is said can be much improved but the results and it is said can be much improved, but the result are certainly curprising, and are of ponsiderable im-portance to the sugar-producing community.
